With "Connections" rule as follows:

1200. — Leucostethus (Leucostethus) leucostethus (Linné).

Proportion of patient is important. For best effectiveness, cattle should be treated as soon as possible after heavily activity such as herding, steaming, or branding. Clenbuterol, clenperine, and ambrisodine may be used as alternatives to the more potent drugs mentioned above. The use of ambrisodine has been shown to be effective in reducing the mortality rate of cattle infected with Leptospiral infection. It is also recommended to use ambrisodine in combination with penicillin G to reduce the chance of resistance.

With a little care the cost of a farm can be reduced to a minimum. The first consideration is the kind of land you want. If you have no experience in cattle raising and management, take a good deal of time to consider the type of land available. It is best to buy land which has been under cultivation for a long time, as it will be more likely to produce a good crop.
