Where the total number of employees is less than 10, the employer may, at his option, exempt the employees from the requirements of the Act, if he can show that the exemption is justified by the nature of the business and the number of employees. The exemption must be approved by the Department of Labor.

2. 1. 1.

THE COURT OF APPEALS IN McLACHLAN found that the contract was not a contract of insurance, and that the clause was not a clause of exemption. It was a clause of limitation of liability. The clause was not a clause of exemption, because it did not exempt the defendant from liability for negligence. It was a clause of limitation of liability, because it limited the defendant's liability to the amount of the sum insured. The clause was not a clause of exemption, because it did not exempt the defendant from liability for negligence. It was a clause of limitation of liability, because it limited the defendant's liability to the amount of the sum insured.
