1. Background - The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of sedentary individuals. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting and involved a group of 20 participants. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group remained sedentary throughout the study, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included cardiovascular exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The physical fitness of the participants was measured at the beginning and end of the study using a series of tests, including a 1-mile run, a 1.5-mile walk, a 1.5-mile jog, a 1.5-mile hike, a 1.5-mile swim, and a 1.5-mile bike ride. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly improved their physical fitness compared to the control group. The improvement was most pronounced in the 1-mile run and 1.5-mile walk tests, where the experimental group showed a significant decrease in time. The results also showed that the experimental group had improved their endurance, as evidenced by their ability to complete the 1.5-mile jog and hike tests. The study concluded that a 12-week training program can significantly improve the physical fitness of sedentary individuals.
