Dear Mr Dickerson

Before some citizens protested, they were out of town, they were against what was already by the authorities both distant and locally; burning was the decision, to eliminate polychlorinated biphenols from the debris extracted from our area waters.

The mainstay of chemistry heat was decided. Hence heat is paramount.

It is suggested that contaminated debris be placed in fireproof decked barges and floated out to sea, in good summer weather, into the path of the gulf stream where it will wafted into the upper reaches of North Atlantic. That way it will no longer be one part per million or trillion but, one part per quadrillion plus. With that value the most querulous ones' arguments will have an insignificant potency.

Yours very truly
